Illinois second appellate supplement the record on appeal process

The process for supplementing the record on appeal in the Second District Appellate Court of Illinois is generally similar to the process described for the Illinois appellate courts in general.

If a party wishes to supplement the record on appeal in the Second District, they must file a motion with the court seeking permission to do so. The motion must explain why the additional materials are necessary and why they were not included in the record at the trial court level.

The motion must be filed with the court within 21 days after the record is filed, or within a shorter period of time if ordered by the court. The motion must also be served on all parties to the appeal.

If the court grants the motion to supplement the record, the party seeking to supplement the record must then file the additional materials with the court within a specified timeframe, usually within 14 days of the court's order granting the motion.

It is important to note that the rules and procedures for supplementing the record on appeal may vary depending on the specific court and the type of case involved. Therefore, it is advisable to consult with an attorney familiar with appellate practice in the Second District Appellate Court of Illinois to ensure compliance with all applicable rules and procedures.
